

TED RODGERS

Ted Rodgers has been faculty member at the University of Hawaii since 1968 and Professor of Psycholinguistics since 1976. He has served on the faculties of Education, English, English as a Second Language, Information Sciences and Psychology. For fifteen years he directed the Hawaii English Program, the largest venture in language education curriculum development as yet undertaken in the U.S. He has authored some sixty books and articles and is co-author (with Jack Richards) of the most popular text on language teaching methodology, Approaches and Methods in Language Teaching, Second Edition (2001) Cambridge University Press. He also co-authored (with J.D. Brown) Doing Second Language Research (Oxford University Press, 2002). Rodgers designed the unique group study format for this text. A recent publication is the chapter “Methods, Approaches and Principles” in the Handbook of Applied Linguistics, Vol 6 (2009).

Professor Rodgers has had residential consultancies and/or visiting professorships in Australia, China, England, Hungary, Japan, Laos, Malaysia, and Turkey. He was Senior Fulbright Fellow and Director of the MATEFL Program at Bilkent University 1995 - 1997. Prof. Rodgers has returned to Turkey ten times in connection with the MATEFL Program and other assignments in Turkey. He has served as Senior Professor and Program Designer in a new degree program in International Communications at Kanda University, Japan (2001 – 2002).

TED RODGERS