

Education process in Ukraine in wartime: teaching English

By Vera Lavrukhina

The report deals with the present situation in Ukraine and touches upon the problems of higher education, in particular, teaching English to future teachers of foreign languages. The necessity of professionals in different branches of industry, in different spheres of life is obvious at any period of the country's development. War period is not an exception. The war of 2022 has exacted a terrible toll on the country and its people. Intense fighting continues to claim the lives of countless innocent civilians, while indiscriminate shelling is reducing once lively neighborhoods to rubble, forcing millions to flee their homes. But the educational process didn't stop. Moreover, it began to resume. Decisions on where and in what format to conduct classes were made by regional authorities and educational institutions. All higher education institutions use the distance mode of education. The mode is not new but in wartime there are some challenges and difficulties, some new educational issues to be considered appeared. Asynchronous mode is one of them. The attention is also paid to the work with Moodle learning management system providing a platform for e-learning. It is preferable at the moment.
